1 Former Ralph Lauren Home designer Sean McNaney's Saved collection combines Mongolian materials with contemporary designs, like this celestial Heptagon cashmere throw, a collaboration with French artist Marin Montagut. 51" x 71", $1,700; king and queen sizes by custom order. saved-ny.com

2 Inspired by American Indian tribes, this Pontiac Triangle mirror—Pontiac was an 18th-century Odawa war chief—made of walnut and Paul Smith for Kvadrat fabric, provides a reflection on American craft. 29" w. x 1.5" d. x 35" h., $2,600. notsogeneral.la

3 If your personality is more Princess Margaret than Queen Elizabeth II, try Saint-Louis's chrome-and-crystal Royal Giant Candelabra, a deconstructed take on the brand's famous 19th-century chandeliers that is the height of an adult. 73" h. x 16" dia., $22,000; also available in Golden finish. saint-louis.com

4 In reinterpreting Jean Cocteau's figurative Limoges porcelain from the 1950s with pastel backgrounds (the Orphée à la Lyre plate is shown), Raynaud has created tableware that works for dinner as well as display. 8" dia. plate, $135. raynaud-shop.com

5 The patterns on Zak+Fox pillows are more than just motifs: They are historical meditations, like Roto, left, based on 1900s Russian rotary prints, and Orkhon, inspired by Mongolian nomads. 20" sq., $305 each. zakandfox.com

6 Gary Oldman had some help from Breguet in his Oscar-winning performance as Sir Winston Churchill in Darkest Hour. The horologists made him this replica of the British prime minister's beloved Breguet 765 pocket watch. More information at breguet.com

"It's so much work finding lamps with charisma," says designer David Netto, who combined his need for good lighting with his passion for 1950s ceramics when he collaborated with artist Jennifer Nocon in 2017 on a collection of table lamps whose handmade bases were inspired by Nigerian Kuba cloth. Their sophomore effort takes cues from Picasso's pottery shapes and features extraterrestrial surface patterns. The resulting creations are sold numbered, edition-style, like the works of art they are. davidnettodesign.com
